First — this is not a managed-IT or security pitch

When we first reached out we led with managed IT and a free security assessment, and you replied you don't have a current need for that. Fair enough — this is something different and, for a firm like Rayco, more valuable: using AI to get found by the community managers who hire reconstruction contractors, and to win more of the bids you already compete for. That is commercial growth, not IT — the front office, never the field.

Rayco Exteriors restores the building envelope of multifamily, HOA, and commercial properties — exterior rehab, painting and waterproofing, dry-rot and structural wood repair, deck and balcony reconstruction, stucco, railings, and siding. With a decade-plus track record, a self-reported 3,500-plus communities completed, a B and C-33 license, and CACM and CAI memberships, the work and the relationships are real. This summary states only verified facts, attributes all review and market figures, and defers company-specific numbers to discovery.

The opportunity is not the craft — it is being found and trusted by the people who hire you. Rayco wins through a knowable universe of community managers, boards, and the construction managers who write the specs — yet its public reputation is thin where they look: a reported 3.4-star, 27-review Google profile sits well below competitors with hundreds of reviews, there is no content hub (the /resources and /careers pages error out), and Rayco does not surface in the AI answers a manager increasingly asks first. The plan has two parts: be found and trusted — a modern site with board-ready SB 326 content, a reputation engine, and authority content; and win more bids — AI that watches the SB 326 cycle and the management portfolios, flags who is sourcing now, and drafts the spec responses. AI works the front end and drafts; your team owns every relationship and verifies every claim — and it never touches the field reconstruction.

What we verified

- A real reconstruction firm: a self-reported 3,500-plus communities and buildings; a B-1019483 general and C-33 painting license; a full envelope service set; CACM Industry Partner (Plus) and CAI-OC memberships; an Escondido base serving OC and San Diego.
- A market on a legal clock: SB 326 requires HOA balcony inspections — first due January 1, 2025, then every nine years — and SB 721 puts apartments on a six-year cycle (first due January 1, 2026). Inspectors diagnose; they do not repair. Rayco's service lines map almost exactly onto the mandated repair scope.
- The gap is reach and reputation, not craft: a reported 3.4-star / 27-review profile, no content engine, and weak presence in AI answers — while better-reviewed competitors take the calls when a manager searches.
- Honest about the facts: we leave the founding year open (sources disagree — 2008 on LinkedIn, 2016 on the business registration), label review counts "reported," and cite no revenue figure because none is public and verified.

A note on precision

We will be precise even where it is inconvenient — leaving the founding year as a discovery item rather than picking one, and labeling third-party review counts "reported." That precision is the standard behind every figure here, and it is how a bid stays credible with a sophisticated buyer.

The engine

Three columns — be found and trusted, win more bids, and respond and operate faster — each delivered by a specific Technijian service, with AI kept entirely on the commercial front end.

Rayco AI Growth & Bid-Intelligence Engine

* My SEO · My AI · My Dev. AI works the commercial front end and drafts; a person verifies every claim and owns every relationship. It never touches the field reconstruction.

Investment & the path forward

Priced from real ranges, no invented numbers. We price from published My SEO / My AI / My Dev ranges, start small — be found and trusted first, because it is the cheapest, fastest win and it lifts every bid that follows — and model returns only after discovery. For a project-based firm, return is value at stake: a single additional reconstruction contract, or one management-company portfolio opened, is worth far more than a year of this engine, so it pays for itself if it wins even one bid that would never have reached you.

The easiest first step is a short working session on where AI creates measurable value for Rayco — no obligation, and nothing about managed IT. The full blueprint ends with a structured questionnaire, "Questions to Complete the Analysis," that turns this summary into a costed, calibrated plan scaled to your firm. And if the answer is "not now," we will respect it.
